

Special Focus

- 70 IUGS 50th Anniversary – Young Scientists Essay Contest Winners
by Wesley Hill

Winning Essays

- 71 CoCoA: The future ingredient for geoscientific research
by Gemma Venhuizen
- 75 Shaky prospects: Anecdotal outlooks on the future of geosciences
by Tim Stahl
- 78 Treading lightly on shifting ground: The direction and motivation of future geological research
by Anne Carter Witt
- 82 The future of the geosciences
by Nathan Barber

Articles

- 86 The Global Stratotype Section and Point (GSSP) for the base of the Lutetian Stage at the Gorrondatxe section, Spain
by Eustoquio Molina, Laia Alegret, Estibaliz Apellaniz, Gilen Bernaola, Fernando Caballero, Jaume Dinarès-Turell, Jan Hardenbol, Claus Heilmann-Clausen, Juan C. Larrasoña, Hanspeter Luterbacher, Simonetta Monechi, Silvia Ortiz, Xabier Orue-Etxebarria, Aitor Payros, Victoriano Pujalte, Francisco J. Rodríguez-Tovar, Flavia Tori, Josep Tosquella and Alfred Uchman
- 109 Charcoalified plant remains from the Lashly Formation of Allan Hills, Antarctica: Evidence of forest fire during the Triassic Period
by Madhav Kumar, Rajni Tewari, Sankar Chatterjee and Naresh C. Mehrotra

Book Review

- 119 Metallogenesis of the Tibetan Collisional Orogen

IUGS

- 121 Wesley M. Hill – A Profile
- 121 Professor Sampat K. Tandon – A Profile
- 123 IGCP Projects 2011
- 125 New IGCP Projects Accepted and Starting in 2011
- 131 IUGS Financial Situation and Statement
- 133 IUGS Directory
-
- 144 Calendar

Cover

Front: Detailed view of the Gorrondatxe section. Members of the Ypresian/Lutetian working group are standing just on the left of the Lutetian GSSP. Photograph by Fernando Caballero.

Back: Panoramic view of the Gorrondatxe section from meter 150 to 250. The Lutetian GSSP is located at meter 167.85 in the ravine on the left side. Photograph by Aitor Payros.